
A JEWISH LAW POINT.

When David Nafalen and David Berman went to attend the passover services of the Keneseth Israel congregation this morning, Trustee Levin wouldn't admit them, and after some hot words the young men went away. Both Nafalen and Berman hold paid tickets entitling them to seats in the Keneseth Israel congregation, but the trustee this morning claimed that, passover being a special occasion, an extra 25 cents should be paid for admission. This raises a nice point in Jewish law.
