The Progress club, an organization composed of Jewish young men prominent in their local social element, was formed a little over a year ago with a charter membership of 12, for society's purposes.

Success has attended the efforts of the club in every project it has undertaken, so far. Recently two more, N. Gidding and I. Goldberg, were admitted to membership.

Several very enjoyable dancing parties have been given under the auspices of the Progress club during the first year of its existence. Every function was largely attended and the young men now have quite an enviable reputation as entertainers.

Some of the affairs were launched as charitable enterprises, and others were given for the purpose of raising funds for the erection of buildings for religious worship in which the club was interested. Among the most noted of the latter sort was a dance which occurred in the middle of the winter season at the Spalding.

The Armory hall and Oatka beach pavilion have all been the scenes of the club's successes.
