

BENNIE GOLDBERGE, BOOTBLACK, WEDS

The maids were the Misses Dollie Oxman and Anna Singer; the men William Oxman and Harry Hoffman.

The crowd now edged about the canopy, craned heads and hats to view the approaching bride. A girl of eighteen, with shy, dark eyes, with delicate mouth and nose and finely pencilled brows, Miss Itchkovitch looked fairy like in tulle and white satin. Her cheeks were pale; like her husband-to-be, she had fasted all day long.

Beside her stood the groom's sister, Mrs. A. Applebaumb, with whom was ranged Mr. Applebaumb, the brother-in-law. Behind Miss Rosie could be seen her mother, whose head was covered with a mantilla-like kerchief and whose gown was black silk.
