

DID KELLY KILL SAM KANER'S MILK FACTORY?

"Did J. A. Kelly, an Irish milkman, kill a cow belonging to Sam Kaner, a Hebrew meat dealer?" This is a question that a jury of 12 men were deliberating on in the Superior court at midnight last night. Reports from the jury room were to the effect that an agreement would not be reached until this morning.

The case which was given to the jury at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon is one whereby Kaner seeks to recover $16 damages from Kelly for a cow which he claims the milkman killed. Evidence introduced during the trial went to show that Kelly held a mortgage on a drove of six cows owned by Kaner. Kelly foreclosed the mortgage and after the matter was settled up the Hebrew still had some of the cows coming. Kaner kept the remainder of his herd in a pasture adjacent to the milkman's dairy. The missing cow was described as being short of one horn which Kaner claims to have dug up with other parts of the animal's body on Kelly's farm.

The testimony of the various witnesses elicited much enthusiasm for the court and jurors especially when it came to describing the bossie that was missing. In reply to a question of Attorney Crawford for the defendant, Louis Weinstein said he never told a lie and stated he was sure that the cow had a broken horn, that she had a star on her face and had white feet. "How old was the cow?" asked the attorney. "One, two, three years," replied the witness. "How do you arrive at the age?" was the next question. "By the weight," came the curt reply. "When did you learn that Kelly took the cow?" "Ven she went away."
