
EIGHT-YEAR-OLD BOY HAS NARROW ESCAPE

Ben Cohen, the eight-year-old son of A. Cohen, 1332 West Michigan street, had a very narrow escape from death yesterday at noon when he was struck by an east-bound car on the corner of Twentieth avenue west and Superior street.

The boy in company with a number of other school children was on his way home from the morning session, and just as the car was reaching the avenue, the children tried to cross the street. The Cohen boy was the last in line and was struck with considerable force and hurled heavily to the ground. The car, which was stopping for some passengers at the time, was not running at a very high speed, so fortunately the boy had a narrow escape. He was taken to a physician's office where it was found that he was cut about the head, but not seriously.
