MISS MARGARET PANTON was the youthful hostess on Friday evening of the season's most brilliant social event, the Colonial cotillion given at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Panton.

To spectators watching the lads and lasses in their teens who danced through the graceful numbers of the cotillion, time seemed to have retraced its steps a century and a half, for the happy young faces were crowned with powdered hair and quaint little black patches accentuated the clear young complexions. The costumes were consistent, even to the old-fashioned shoes, and the three-cornered hats. The setting arranged for the cotillion was perfect and carried out the spirit of Colonial days. The big ball room was decorated with flags, over which presided the eagle. The mantel was banked with geraniums, phlox and ferns. The orchestra played from an alcove. In the billiard room, a royal eagle spread his wings above the broad table and clusters of old-fashioned pinks and golden glow suggested nosegays from bygone gardens.

Mrs. George H. Crosby and Mrs. John C. Williams presided over the punch bowl in this room, which is just off the ball room. Miss Ingram, of Chicago, led the cotillion. There were five figures including the graceful minuet and the moon dance, during which the room was darkened save from light thrown out by a gigantic moon in the mystic light of which the young people glided about like a company of fairies. One figure was beautiful with a garland drill.

After the cotillion, a gigantic Teddy Bear was ushered into the room. The boys of the party rained blows upon the bear and the breast of that generous animal opened to permit balls of confetti to roll out on the floor. The merriment was at its height as the young folks pelted one another with the confetti and danced a bear dance around "Teddy."

Assisting about the rooms were Mrs. Jeffrey, Mrs. W. W. Walker, Miss Gamble, Miss Faye Richardson and Miss Kathryn Richardson.

Mrs. A. W. Hartman, Mrs. Thomas F. Cole, Mrs. C. A. Luster, Mrs. Joseph B. Cotton and Mrs. Hans Christensen distributed the cotillion favors. These included hats for the boys and chiffon boas for the girls; canes for the boys, fans for the girls; stickpins for the boys, exquisite satin bags for the girls; drums for the boys, flags for the girls and in the wand figure, floral wands for both. Little Dorothy Chisholm received the quaint dancers at the door and Dorothy Panton stood at the head of the stairway to direct them to their places.

On the upper floor Mr. and Mrs. Panton had arranged tables that the adult guests, parents of the children, might play cards. The parlors of the Panton home, which is a handsome Colonial structure were decorated with the garden flowers dear to daughters of the Revolution. There was no card playing, however, the cotillion proving far too engrossing to the spectators to be left for the less novel pastime.

Refreshments were served to the young people in diminutive flower pots and ferneries.

The young people dancing were: Misses Barbara Patrick, Dorothy Olcott, Elizabeth Olcott, Dorothy House, Marjorie Morrow, Elizabeth Congdon, May Jeffrey, Marie d'Autremont, Eileen Cole, Judith Hartley, Nathalie Smith, Marion Elger, Grace Weston, Mary Weston, Mary Frick, Melville Silver, Marjorie Shipard, Marie Turrish, Margaret McKinley, Ramona Hoopes, Katherine Dentfeld, Dorothy Sharp, Dorothy Dowse, Marjorie Harrison, Esther Coffin, Marie Agatin, Helen Williams, Nannie Turrish, Margaret Elder, Margaret Barrows, Margaret Porter.
