

STORY-ENOUGH TO MAKE THE POOR GOOSE WILD

John Sher, of the Phil Sher & Co. meat market, 25 East First street, yesterday afternoon identified a wild goose that appeared in an evening paper's near-nature-fake story, as a common domestic goose which escaped from the meat market in the morning.

There was wild excitement on Superior street when the bird was found with teeth chattering, and its ears frozen, coatless and mittenless, yesterday in front of the Lowell block.

Ernest Johnson, a bartender, found the bird and was stirred to pity. He took the creature into his place of business and set 'em up on the house. The goose took a cigar.

The evening paper concluded "the goose apparently came in from the lake," but John Sher said it escaped from his meat factory.
