The aim of the convention is to re-establish commercial relations on their former basis.

MILWAUKEE'S NEW SOCIALIST MAYOR

Daniel W. Hoan.

Milwaukee, Wis., April 12.—Daniel W. Hoan, cook, is now mayor of Milwaukee by virtue of the socialist victory in last week's municipal election.

And this is no reflection upon the new mayor, for though a cook, he has proved himself a big man in every sense of the word. Even the opponents of the socialist ticket at the last election had no criticism of his ability, basing their opposition to his party solely, not to his personality.

A man of only thirty-five years, Hoan is one of those who have made good by hard work, for by working as a hotel cook he earned the money to get his education, working his way in the restaurant while studying law, and for six years has been city clerk.

Hoan was born at Waukegan, Wis., March 12, 1881, and as his father died when the boy was fourteen, the son was forced to quit school and earn his own living. He worked in hotel kitchens in his native town, then a great summer resort, and soon became a well-known chef, the equal of the European importers. He saved enough to secure an education at the University of Wisconsin, and after graduating in the arts and letters course, began to take the law courses. Lack of money forced him to quit his studies and he went to Chicago in 1908 to open a small restaurant. He ran his restaurant by day and studied law at night and finally dropped his restaurant, which he sold for enough to help him on his way. Working for a Chicago law firm for $6 a week, he studied at night and graduated from the Kent college of law, coming to Milwaukee in 1909 to practice law.

He went to office in 1910 with the socialists and finally dropped the law and was re-elected in 1914, though the other socialists were returned to private life in 1915. He term as city clerk and has since then been mayor.

PREPAREDNESS APPROVED.

Minnesota University Students Vote Against Compulsory Service.

Minneapolis, April 12.—Military preparedness was approved and compulsory military service voted down by a substantial majority by the students of the University of Minnesota, where a poll was taken on the questions by the institution's branch of the National Preparedness league.

Every one of the 500 students who voted, answered "yes" to the question, "Do you favor early action by congress in the interests of national defense?"

Seven-tenths of those voting opposed compulsory service, while the remaining 150 supported the proposal.

"Do you believe we should have a standing army larger than 140,000 provided in the Hay bill?" was one of the questions. Four hundred students considered a standing army of 140,000 adequate.

The poll followed a close study of the country's resources by the students who were permitted to express their views.
