SUGGEST CUTTING OUT RIVER BEND

The matter of the floods in the Red river and the resulting inundation of large portions of territory in the city that is otherwise dry land, is still a prime topic of discussion among citizens, especially those who have had property damaged by the floods and these who have the conditions of the con and those who are interested in the Several suggestions have been made Several suggestions have been made for the preventing of damage in the city by floods in the river, among them being the elevation of Fourth street south to form a levee to keep the water out of Island park.

Several citizens have been discussing the possibility of straightening the stream through the city, beginning where the river starts to swing west just east of St. John's hospital, and then continuing straight north to a just east of St. John's hospital, and then continuing straight north to a point where the stream ends its return northeast swing and starts north again. This would put the river changain. This would put the river changel between 75 and 100 yards further east, cutting out the bend at the footbridge and bringing the property between the river channel and the low ground east into Minnesota over the rise just east of the Sandy place, into North Dakota. North Dakota vhat was evidently once an old bed of the stream the ground could be dredged out and the present channel filled up, and by doing this the river would be between high banks all the way through the two cities—the east bank being already high and the west bank high except where the river channel now runs.

Of course this would necessitate a number of important changes, such as the extending of the trunk sewers, which now empty just below the dam, the abandoning of the dam itself, not to mention a change in the boundary line between the two states and the probable acquisition by North Dakota of the land in the bend.

However, it is argued by those advocating the proposition, that this scheme would not only keep the water out of Island Park, prevent the floodout of Island Park, prevent the flooding of the auditorium and a large number of dwellings, but would protect St. John's hospital and a lot of other valuable property in that part of the city.

Peking, Aug. 1.—Superstitions played an important part in the life of Yuan Shi-kai, and even influenced his last hours. Like most Chinese of the old school, Yuan Shi-kai constantly sought fortune tellers and astrologists. Many years ago he was told by a fortune teller that he would die when he was about 58 years old. This gloomy forecast had a decided effect upon the late president. The men of his family had all been comparatively short-lived. His father, his grandfather, his uncles and older brothers did not attain the age of 60. Consequently Yuan Shi-kai believed his span of life would be similarly limited, and was strengthened in his belief by the fortune teller's statement.
