Man Found Dead in Hotel Elevator Shaft Fled Russia to Escape Military Service.

Indirectly responsible for the death of Zalman Levine, age 24, whose crushed body was found in an elevator shaft at the Spalding hotel Wednesday night, was his determined refusal to be pressed into the service of the Russian

Young Levine until a short time ago had lived with his parents in Russia. His father, according to the report, insisted that the young man enlist in the                      and the parent's order was no less unqualified than mandates that have made the czar known as a tyrant.

Young Levine, rebelling against the prospective enforced service, sought the counsel and aid of his brother, Harry Levine, who has been in this country for several years and who is still employed as floor porter at the Spalding hotel. The latter sent Zalman money, with the injunction that he come at once to the United States. Upon his arrival in Duluth he was given employment at the Spalding, where both brothers had worked since.

Levine will be buried at the Jewish cemetery this morning, the funeral being from Crawford's undertaking rooms at 9 o'clock.
