

CITY'S FAMOUS NEWSBOY DIES

Loy Shenowsky, Better Known as "Mooney" Succumbs to Long Ailment.

"Mooney" is no more.

Duluth's famous newsboy, dropped dead on Fifth street Saturday night after he had finished selling his papers.

"Mooney" was a dwarf and although past the age of 19 his customers would have sworn that he was not more than eight. He was short and plump and had a brown, stolid little face which rarely expressed anything particular, and was never moved in merriment, though when a passer-by looked sympathetically at him just the shadow of a smile would waver about the corners of his mouth.

He trudged along through the world with little to say to anybody about him, and although apparently in good health it was plain that the causes which had made him a solemn little dwarf instead of a strong and happy man had left something wrong; but he never complained.

When he left his home as usual early Saturday afternoon to buy and sell his papers he made no complaint of illness. He went through the afternoon well enough but at 7 o'clock in the evening while on his way home to 923 Fourth avenue east, he fell down on the street almost unconscious.

By-standers carried him to the residence of Dr. Schlick, 519 East Third street, where he was pronounced dead.

The intricate internal system which had been the cause of his misfortune in the world had played him its last ill trick. The passage of air in his wind pipe was interrupted and he gasped and choked helplessly while life escaped him.

"Mooney's" real name was Loy Shenowsky. His funeral will be held this morning at 8 o'clock and he will be buried in the Jewish cemetery.
