

FRIEDMAN BROTHERS' DOMESTIC WOOLENS ARRIVE

The textile workers' strike in Lawrence, Lynn and Lowell, Massachusetts, which was so keenly felt by Duluth tailors, because of their inability to get domestic woollens ordered the early part of this year, has been settled and the belated shipments are arriving each day.

Friedman Bros.' business has been affected by the strike perhaps more than any other tailors in Duluth. It has always been their custom to make an early trip east each year contracting for certain exclusive fabrics which have proven very popular with the business men of this city. Their inability to get the domestic weaves was a great disappointment to many of their customers who prefer the domestic to the imported materials.

Ben Friedman stated to a representative of the News Tribune yesterday that the last of his shipments had arrived and he was now ready to show the new goods to the many persons who have put off buying their spring and summer clothes until the arrival of the domestic fabrics.
