

His Last Official Acts.

Max Bloom and Jennie Shapira procured a license to wed yesterday and then called upon Judge Morris to tie the nuptial knot. This was the last but one of Judge Morris' official acts. Just after the ceremony was performed two small boys presented themselves and asked that their father, John Brooks, be released from the county jail, where he had been sent on February 23 on a charge of drunkenness. They said their mother was ill in bed, that their father had promised to abstain from liquor for a year and they prayed for his deliverance. The judge had compassion and authorized the sheriff to release Brooks. Then Judge Morris bid good bye to the municipal court room, went home and put on his hunting outfit and started for W. T. Bailey's lumber camp, where he will enjoy much needed rest and recreation.
