

PORTER PULLS A RAZOR.

Drunken Porter Uses an Emphatic Argument on Levin.

There was a good deal of excitement in Levin's saloon at 213 West Superior street yesterday morning, according to the story of the proprietor. The creator of the excitement was a colored man whom Mr. Levin employed as porter on Saturday morning. The porter's name could not be learned.

The porter worked one day, and appeared at the saloon yesterday morning somewhat the worse for liquor. He demanded his pay. Mr. Levin said that the porter had not carried out his agreement to work.

The porter did not argue this point verbally, but pulled a "razzer," and informed Mr. Levin that certain things would happen if the pay were not forthcoming at once. Mr. Levin was behind the bar, and the porter could not get at him very readily.

Mr. Levin started to call an officer, and the belligerent made his escape by the back door. The police were unable to find the fellow yesterday, and he did not appear at the saloon again.
