The unusual number of reports of the drowning of horses in northern Minnesota as a result of their breaking through the ice on lakes and rivers is causing comment in Duluth. It is said that teamsters assume, because of the considerable amount of cold weather which has been experienced, that the ice ought to be strong enough to bear a team. The large number that have been deceived is said to be due to the fact that much snow fell early on the ice, and the ice has not increased much in thickness since, as the snow affords protection.
