The Washington baseball team won the grade school championship last season in one of the best leagues that the schools have had. With only one or two exceptions, all of last season's players are back and the prospects look encouraging for another pennant winning bunch. The boys keep together well and are developing not a little team work.

They have played two games with the high school this spring and all but defeated the older students in the first of the contests. The pitching of Henry Azine is one of the features of nearly every game in which the Washingtons participate. Azine is a little fellow, but he is clever and cool and in one of the games with the high school he had the big fellows fanning the air helplessly.
