"Disraeli." Parker's great play of England's great statesman, was read and reviewed yesterday morning at the study class meeting of the Duluth center of the Drama league. The play was read by Miss Rachel St. Clair, who gave a masterly interpretation of the character of Disraeli, statesman, philosopher and idealist, and the dainty women of the mid-Victorian period whose charm permeates the play. In her analysis of "Disraeli" Miss Olcott pointed out the contradictory elements which made up the character of the eminent statesman—the shrewdness, the startling grasp of human nature and character which his actions displayed, the whimsical humor of his thought, and his devotion and chivalrous care toward his wife. But about the purchase of the Suez canal, the play has political machination for its overnote, with the under current of a pretty love affair to relieve the dominant topic. Parker's love for pageant effects was emphasized in the fourth act, where courtiers and women of title gather to hear the queen receive her title of "Empress of India." The work of the Drama league of New York city, in keeping "Disraeli" from being withdrawn from presentation, was pointed out by Mrs. S. R. Holden at the conclusion of the reading. In connection with the reading of the play, which is without doubt his masterpiece, it is interesting to recall that Parker is the author of "Pomander Walk," which appeared at the Lyceum here last year.
