DULUTH WALLINGFORD SELLS COW, NOT HIS, TO SUPERIOR BUTCHER

J. Rufus Wallingford of fiction fame was only a step ahead of the man who gave Morris Goldberg, 427 John avenue, live stock dealer, an expensive bargain yesterday by selling him a cow belonging to J. C. Luzon, Hunter's Park, Duluth.

Only $5 was paid down for the cow at the time of purchase and it was agreed that the rest should be collected in Superior. The purchase price was set at $35.

Goldberg had suspicions about the deal, but the stranger took him up the incline railway in Duluth and showed him the cow tethered to a stake in a pasture back of the crest of the hill.

But the sad, piteous look in the eyes of the gentle cow as she was led away to be slaughtered worked on the man for he failed to appear for the rest of the money and even telephoned that he didn't own the cow.

In this way the animal was saved to continue its milk-giving existence.

Goldberg was out the $5, but when the owner was notified his cow was found he agreed to settle that by giving Goldberg a $5 reward.
