Geo. R. Holmes & Son Going Out of Business

For over forty years this reliable old house has carried the name of being the largest distributor of diamonds and fine jewelry west of Chicago.

With the excessive increases that have come in late years in the cost of doing business has come the conclusion that this terrific addition to the purchase price can be materially reduced to our customers by the elimination of that part of our stock which calls for large expensive show rooms and their consequent additional expense.

We propose instead:

Rich, home-like offices, away from the eager gaze of the curious, wherein one may be served in absolute privacy, always assured against interruption from the street.

Every article in our stock will be offered from now until January 1st at prices far below our present cost to replace them.

"The Customer First"

These three words express the thought behind the foundation of this business fifty-one years ago.

And these three words express the spirit which will continue to determine the policies of the organization in the future just as they have done in the past.

Merchandise of unquestionable quality fairly priced, and unswerving courtesy to the customer, are essentials to the successful development and maintenance of this ideal—and we fully recognize the necessity of consistently serving our customers in accordance with the principles which these "essentials" imply, at all times, and under all circumstances.
