How to pick best bishop

Appointment of a new auxiliary bishop to the Chicago archdiocese raises some questions about the process of selecting bishops and about who should be selected. A check on some reactions to the appointment of Bishop Nevin Hayes as auxiliary to John Cardinal Cody reveals both well-wishing and misgivings. Bishop Hayes, 49, was appointed Tuesday by Pope Paul VI, just as he had been appointed in 1959 to head the church territory of Sicuani, in Peru.

The Sicuani area has some 290,000 Catholics living in altitudes ranging from 12,000 to 23,000 feet. Poor health forced Bishop Hayes to resign that post.

He was consecrated a bishop in 1965 in Holy Name Cathedral, Chicago, when Sicuani was made a diocese.

The Lay people of Sicuani had no say in his choice. Neither did the lay people of the Chicago archdiocese when it came to their getting an auxiliary bishop.

Probably only a few Catholics will object to this procedure, and the Chicago-born-and-bred Bishop Hayes will surely receive the "warm welcome" wished for him this week by Cardinal Cody.

But discontent has been expressed this week and before about this method of picking bishops, by which the recommendation of the apostolic delegate, an Italian living in Washington, makes all the difference.

Nothing serves better to keep the U.S. hierarchy "in the fold" as envisioned by officials of the Roman Curia, observers say, than this power exercised by the delegate.

CARDINAL Cody has asked for and gotten suggestions from his priests (not lay people) as to who among them would make good bishops.

But these suggestions were given in secret, and no public accounting of them is made.

McGovern builds fund for '72 race

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota has made a $261,000 beginning on the costly business of running for President. He expects to spend about $500,000 on his Democratic White House quest during 1971. And that will be the inexpensive part of his campaign; the real money will be needed in 1972 for the presidential primary elections McGovern believes will be decisive. McGovern's political revenues thus far include $161,000 in contributions mailed in response to the Jan. 15 letter in which he announced his candidacy, and about $100,000 in donations and pledges he said he received at the time of his announcement.

THE LETTER, addressed to "My dear friend," went to 275,000 people across the nation. In it, McGovern outlined his background and his views, stressing his opposition to the war in South Vietnam, and sought financial support to "start bringing my case to the people across the country throughout 1971."

That letter has to date drawn about 14,000 replies, most of them accompanied by small contributions, many of them mentioning McGovern's role as a critic of administration policy in Southeast Asia.

A joint resolution "putting hawk and dove together on the same perch," Church asserted, "would unite the country on a common policy to end the war." Church appeared with Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.) on the CBS television-radio program "Face the Nation."
